Introduction

OK, let's get this straight, I'm Kuzco, and this video game is about ME.

It just so happens that I, Kuzco, am the victim in this story, a victim of circumstance. My ancient crone of an advisor Yzma was getting a little crusty around the edges, so I canned her. Well, I guess she had some monkey on her back that day, because she got it into her oh-so twisted (and old, did I mention she was old?) head to kill me—KILL ME, the Emperor—and take my place. Yeah, as if SHE could rule with anything close to my subtle mastery of diplomacy.

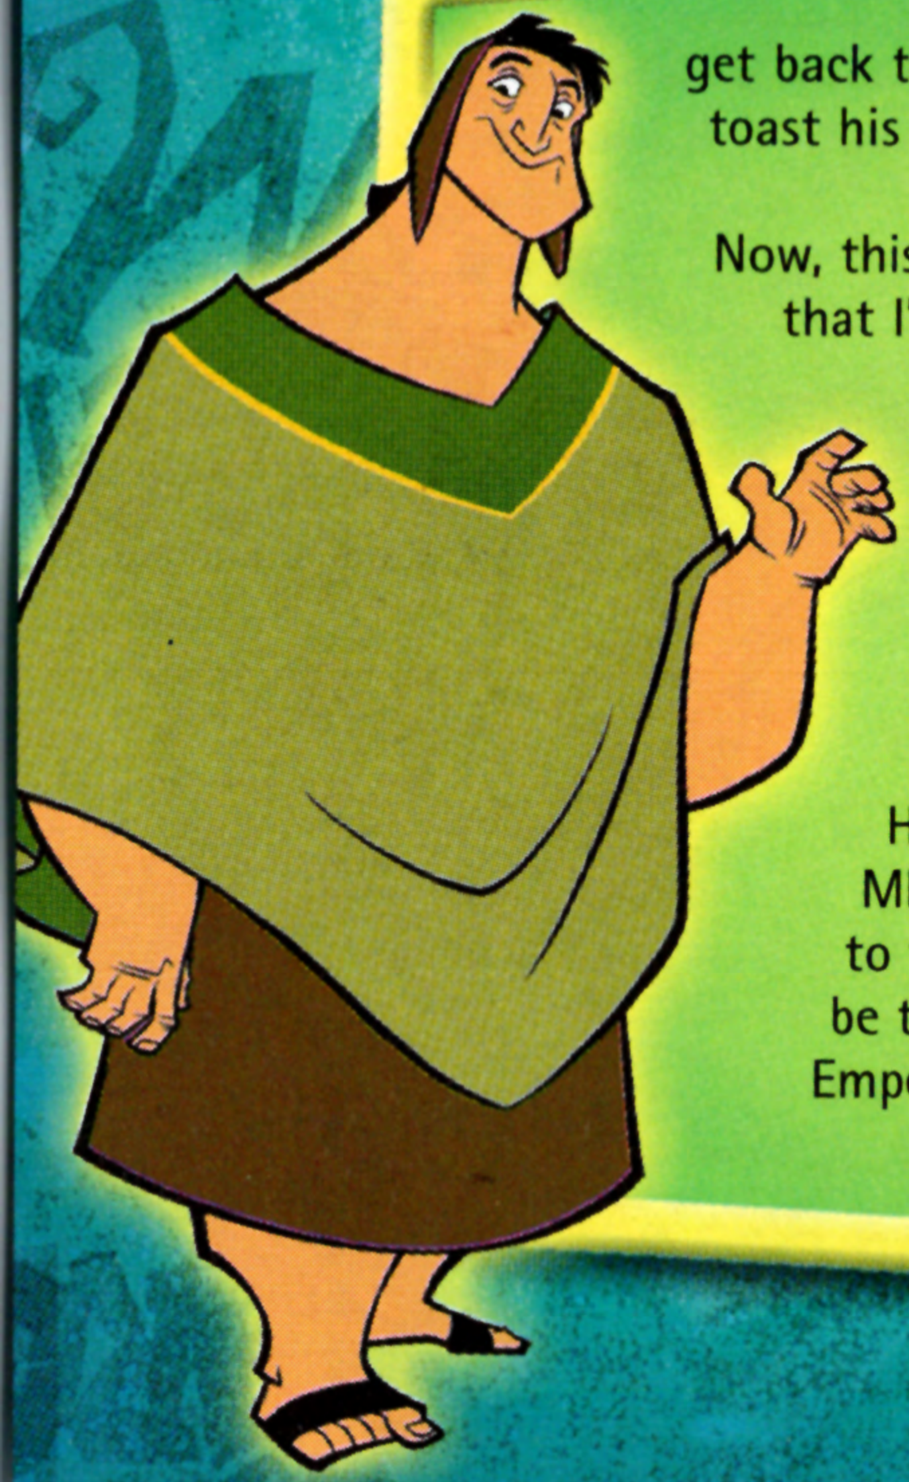

Well, fortunately for me, Yzma's got this assistant, Kronk, who traded in half his brains for muscles somewhere along the way. To put things mildly, Kronk messes up and instead of killing me, turns me into a llama. Could have been a panther, an eagle, or something else a bit more elegant and less smelly, but no, it had to be a llama.

In order to make up for his blunder, Kronk dumps me into this villager's cart and assumes that I'm history. And, get this, it's not just ANY cart that I get dumped into, it just happens to be one owned by this peon, Pacha, whose village I had just promised to wipe out.

A few days later I wake up (llama spit drool and everything) in Pacha's quaint little village and Pacha figures out who I am. Now, this could have gotten pretty ugly, but it turns out that Pacha is actually a pretty decent guy, so he offers to help me get back to the palace as long as I promise not to toast his village.

Now, this was a pretty tough decision considering that I'd already put a down payment on the caterers for the village-smashing ground-breaking ceremony, but quite honestly, being a llama is really itchy. So, we agreed, and our journey back to the Palace (MY Palace) and confronting the old hag Yzma began.

Here's where you come in—you get to play ME (aren't you lucky), and help Pacha get me to the Palace and defeat Yzma so that I can be turned back into my handsome human Emperor self again.

The Game Screen

Number of Tries

This is the number of tries that I, Kuzco, have to complete the game. When I've got no more tries left, the game is over—and you lose.

Health Hearts

This is the amount of damage that I can take from enemies or things in my kingdom. When I've got no more Health Hearts left, I loose a try. Hot news flash here—this is bad, don't do this too much. I can also collect Hearts during the game, if I have lost any.

Spit Meter

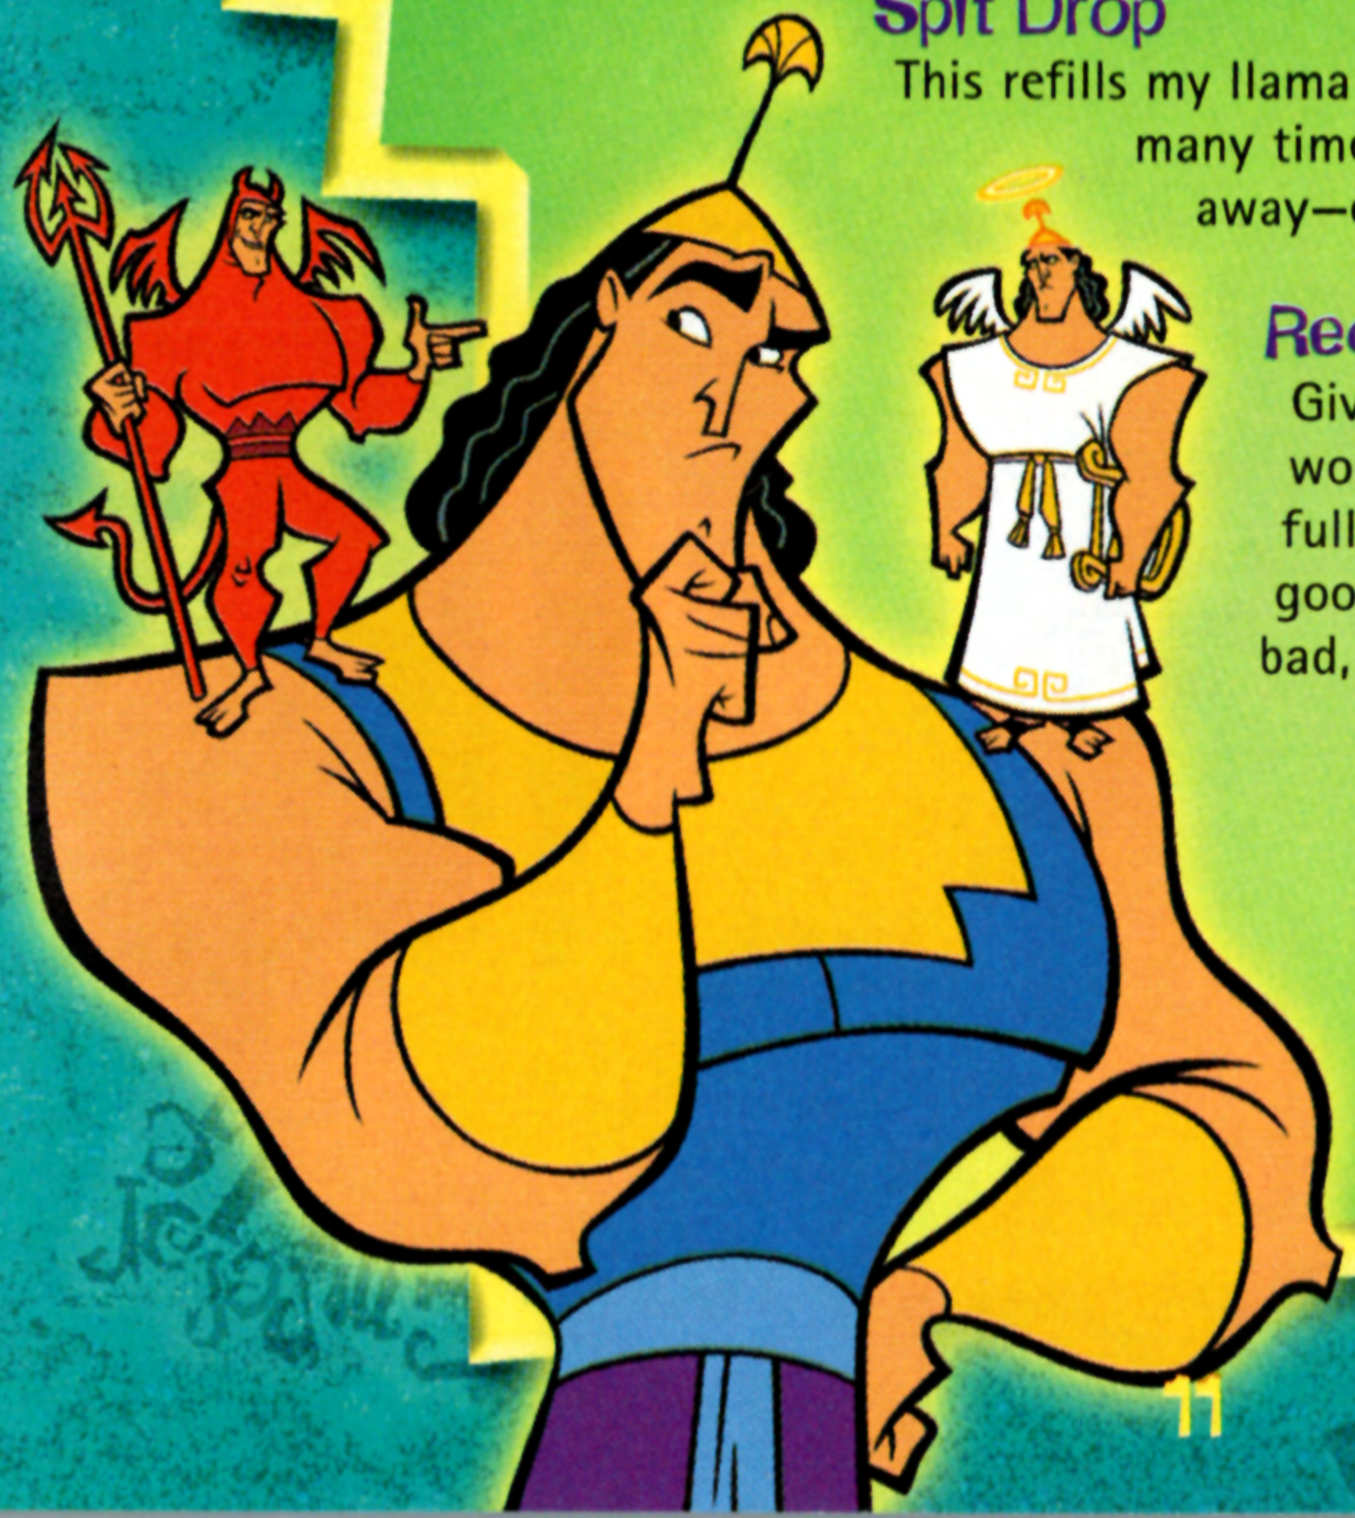

I'm not a firehose of spit, OK. Every time I spit, this little meter needs to refill before I can spit again. Oh, boy.

Spit

This is the amount of nasty, smelly llama spit that I've got. Each full drop allows me to spit once. When all of the drops are empty, I'm out of spit and at the mercy of all those bad-boy jungle creatures. Spit can be refilled at Spit Drop Collectables—what a fulfilling job someone has refilling those.

Collectible Items

Spit Drop

This refills my llama spit—no matter how many times I use this, it never goes away—even if you want it to.

Red Heart

Gives me a health unit—I won't pick this up if I've got full health already—which is good because, like, waste is bad, or something.

Gold Coin

Gives me an extra try—I won't collect these if I've already got the maximum number of tries. Now, if I were playing the game, I wouldn't need these, but then again, you're not me, are you?

Jug

These contain hidden items—have me head butt or charge attack these to break them. It's like presents, but the unwrapping part involves head-butting, yeah, fun.

Levels

Village

Ooh, a quaint little village on a hilltop. This place will look way better as my summer getaway-KUZCOTOPIA! In the meantime, you'd think that someone would at least do something about all the creepy-crawlies hanging around here—ewe. Oh, well, what can a llama do? If you can get me to Pacha, I'll be alright—Pacha's the man.

Jungle

Doesn't anyone ever SWEEP around here?!! And what's with all the monkeys? Didn't I have someone write a leash law or something? Once I get back to the Palace, remind me to make Pacha my official Animal Services officer. I'm sure he'll be eternally grateful.

Cliff

Spiders and scorpions and snakes, oh my. I'm a llama on a mission, don't bug me. Get it, "bug", heh heh...ok a little royal humor there—probably over your head.

Jaguar Boss

Nice kitty, good kitty. OW!!!! BAD KITTY, BAD KITTY!!!

City

No bowing peons, no trumpets, no groveling lackeys—sigh—it's just not the same place without my bright, shining royal face leading a procession of gold and jewel clad...ah, why depress myself by thinking of it. Once I get to the Palace and back to normal, we'll have this place back to normal in no time.

Lab

Well now, the cleaning staff has definitely taken a little time off down here, huh. Like, say about a hundred years. Spiders and bats and all things old and nasty—now that's an interesting design motif—very Yzma. Now if I were a potion made by an evil, megalomaniac, where would I be?

Palace

All right, these guards are all toast once I'm back to Emperor form again. Gone, fired, no severance pay, no placement help, history. If they can't figure out who's boss, that's their problem, not mine. Buh-bye, and don't let the curtains hit you on the way out—you might get dust on them.

Yzma Boss

Stand back, oh ancient one, or I'll start throwing wrinkle cream at you.

Friends and Enemies

Kuzco

That's me—I thought I was cool. I thought I was adored. I thought I was on top of the world, until it all came crashing down around me. That's when I figured out that I was actually a smug, young emperor with no friends and no clue. After my little llama experience, I learned my lessons about how to treat people and the value of friendship...I guess you could say it changed my groove.

Pacha

My pal. Pacha's a simple peasant with a village on some prime real estate—that I wanted. I wasn't planning on becoming buddies with him, but then the big lug goes and changes my life. Besides, his wife knits awesome ponchos.

Yzma

She used to be my loyal "diva-meets-mad-scientist" advisor. Then she turned, like, 135 or something and kinda lost her way. She suffers from a severe case of power envy, but when it comes to making potions and poisons, I gotta hand it to her—she's one evil genius!

Kronk

Yzma's partner in crime—where she's got brains, he's all brawn. To help him make decisions, he has a little angel Kronk on one shoulder, and a little devil Kronk on the other—you know the deal. And even though he poisoned me, tied me in a sack and threw me in a river, deep down he's an OK guy.

Guards

What's happened to my once loyal servants? It seems like Yzma's trained them to attack any llama they see on sight. Hah! Well, these big, tough lunks are no match for the fast and furious vengeance of my llama hooves! And perhaps a super-generous helping of llama spit.

Creepy Crawlies

Rats, angry monkeys, piranhas, snakes, llama-eating plants, scorpions, spiders, bats. Oh, yeah, bring 'em baby, because big daddy exterminator llama is in the house.

Hints

Doors and Triggers
Hock a generous helping of my llama spit on the trigger to open the door for a period of time. If you pass by the door, it will stay open. Cha-ching.

Scrolls
Someone has thoughtfully placed scrolls with useful information on them in each level. Apparently I still have some loyal subjects.

Enemies
As if I'd have anything easy, all the enemies are different. You'll have to work (eeeww) to figure out which attack works best on each enemy.

Pacha
Pacha hangs out at the end of every level, waiting to guide me on to the next hazardous course. He definitely needs more to do.

Jumping
Little tip—be careful on the big jumps, I bruise easy.

Spitting
OK, this is, like, really gross, but you've got to practice spitting.

Spit Drops
So, take out your little note pad and jot down where the spit drops are. You're gonna need a lot of goopy-green smelly llama spit to get through this game.
